The CIA's subsidizing of U.S. student groups was a strikingly successful anti-Communist move and the secrecy involved was an essential element in the success, Sen. Jackson (D., Wash.), a member of the Senate panel that oversees the agency, said in a broadcast interview. Goldwater, in another interview, said he saw nothing wrong with the CIA's use of various groups in its intelligence-gathering operations but complained that all the money went to "left-wing organizations."
